Important note about your personal rate of return: Your personal rate of return is an estimate of the performance of all your Retirement Investments over the specified period. It's an estimate rather than an exact rate of return because we approximate the impact your cash flows have on your performance. The figure: (1) includes expenses, interest and dividend payments; (2) includes contributions and withdrawals, weighted by the number of days between the date of contribution or withdrawal and the end of the quarter; (3) excludes the performance of products purchased through TIAA's brokerage window and Retirement Healthcare Savings product; and (4) may be different from the return of the individual funds or other investment options included in the portfolio. If your retirement portfolio included cash outflows or inflows, the figure may differ from your actual rate of return depending on market volatility following these cash flows. Past performance is not a guarantee of future results.
